Fall 1982

New Faculty, Staff Join Siena

Several new faculty and staff appointments were made for this fall at Siena.

•Louis Bonanni, assistant professor of finance, is a certified public accountant. He has a bachelor's from John Carroll University in Cleveland and a master's of business administration from the University of Cincinnati.

•John Huonker, assistant professor of business, is returning to Siena after a five year absence. While on leave he completed the course work for his doctorate in personnel management at the University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill. He holds a bachelor's and a master's of business administration from New York University and his specialty is organizational behavior.

•Carl Kaster, assistant professor of biology, is a doctoral candidate in biology and holds a bachelor's from the University of Louisville. He expects to receive his doctorate in December. Kaster previously taught biology at Indiana University—Southeast and at the University of Louisville. His special interest is entomology.

•John Pantano will teach in the math and computer science department. He has a bachelor's from the University of Michigan and a master's in education from the University of Toledo, where he is working on his doctorate in research and mathematics education.

•Tim Leonard, assistant professor in humanities, has returned to Siena after a two year leave while he worked on his doctorate in international studies at Indiana University. He holds both a bachelor's and a master's from the University of Toledo, and his specialties are in international relations and the Middle East.

•Elaine L'Etoile, lay campus minister, recently received her master's in religious studies from Fordham University in New York. She has worked on various liturgical committees and was previously a campus minister at Stonehill College in Massachusetts after receiving her bachelor's there.

•Rev. Tom Landgraff, O.S.F.S., campus minister, was previously a teacher, chaplain, and counselor at various high schools including St. Francis de Sales and Central Catholic in Toledo. He is working on a master's in counseling from the University of Toledo and has been active in retreat movements for college-age students.

•Michelle LaVoy, campus safety director, has worked as a security guard at Siena since Sept. 1981. She received her bachelor's in human services from Siena in May 1982.

•Margaret Lawler, coordinator of campus facilities and activities, graduated from Siena in May 1982. She has a bachelor's in social science and graduated Magna Cum Laude. Margaret will continue taking courses toward her master's at Siena.

Bishop Povish Speaks at Academic Convocation

"My field is theology," the Most Reverend Bishop Kenneth J. Povish told the faculty, staff, and students at the Academic Convocation opening the 1982-83 school year at Siena Heights College. "No matter what field you're in, my field affects you."

Bishop Povish, the leader of Catholics in the 10-county Lansing Diocese, which includes Lenawee County, recently spoke on "Moral Theology Since Vatican II" at Siena's Academic Convocation.

The Academic Convocation at Siena allows the faculty, staff, and students to gather together and reflect on the traditions and values of Siena while planning the new academic year.

The Most Rev. Povish was named Bishop of the Lansing Diocese in 1975. Previously he was Bishop of Crookston (Minnesota) Diocese for five years, dean of St. Paul Seminary in Saginaw, and pastor of parishes in Port Sanilac, Munger, and Bay City.

"Contemporary Catholics are responsible for their own moral decisions," The Most Rev. Bishop Kenneth J. Povish of the Lansing Diocese told the faculty, staff, and students attending the Academic Convocation at Siena Heights College. "You should seek out the clergy for moral and spiritual consultation, but your priest can't tell you right from wrong. Only you can do that."

A native of Alpena, Bishop Povish holds a bachelor's from Sacred Heart Seminary in Detroit, a master's from Catholic University of America in Washington, D.C., and has done additional study at Northern Michigan University. He was ordained a priest in 1950.

Sr. Helen Sohn, O.P., vicaress of the Adrian Dominican Congregation, offered the invocation at the convocation. Senior Maureen Brady, president of the Siena Student Senate, and Catherine Venus-Madden, vice chairperson of the Siena Teaching Faculty Assembly, welcomed the Siena community back to campus for the new academic year. James Ebben, dean and provost, introduced Bishop Povish.

"During the 20 years since Vatican II, the Catholic Church has become more ecumenical," the Bishop stated. "Christian clergy of all denominations are frequently meeting together to exchange their views on theology, study, and learn from each other."

Bishop Povish spoke on several of the changes in the Catholic church since the Vatican II Council met in 1962.

"The contemporary Catholic church has rejected the stringent legalism we were once known for," he explained. The church has re-examined the rules and regulations that once directed the lives of Catholics.

"As a young priest, I can remember coming home for Sunday dinner and finding my father washing the car," he recalls. "I would argue him about working on Sunday. The scriptures say Sunday is a day of rest and I told him washing the car was working. What would the neighbors think if the priest's father was working on Sunday."

The morality of one's acts is now emphasized, rather than the specific rules and regulations established by the church, Bishop Povish stated.

"It is your general path of life that determines if you are a good Christian or a good Catholic, not if you follow rules and regulations. Is the course of your life toward God? That is what is important."

The acceptance of social responsibility is another contemporary emphasis of the Catholic church since Vatican II.

"Catholics are not just responsible for their own spiritual growth," he stressed. "We are responsible for the spiritual growth of others as well."

The communal rite of penance stresses this emphasis on social responsibility, he stated. "We gather together as a community to acknowledge our sins and ask God's forgiveness."

The tentativeness of moral theology and the cultural influences on an individual's morality and values are also recognized by the contemporary Catholic church.

"There are no longer absolute rights and wrongs," he emphasized. "What is considered morally right and acceptable for a Catholic in Adrian may not be considered moral for a Catholic in Nigeria or El Salvador. The church today recognizes and accepts these differences."

Within the Lansing diocese, Bishop Povish said there are 33 different communities distinguished by their color, race, language, or nationality. "But yet, they are all Catholics, and what is considered morally right for one group may not be for others."

In conclusion, Bishop Povish said contemporary Catholics must accept responsibility for their individual moral decisions. "Catholics can no longer depend on the priest to tell them right from wrong. The clergy is there for moral and spiritual consultation, but they can't determine what is right and wrong for you. Only you can do that."

"Morality is the basis for reflections and determination of our values and principles. Today there are so many factors that influence our values," the Bishop stressed. "The church is not ready for the nuclear age. These are interesting times."

In thanking Bishop Povish for his remarks at the Academic Convocation, Siena President Louis C. Vaccaro stated that he was pleased the tradition of the opening academic convocation has been revived at Siena.

"It is through these traditions that we are able to gather together and reflect on the values that were established by the Adrian Dominican Congregation when they founded Siena Heights College in 1919."

A reception for the Bishop followed the convocation.

With Sympathy

At press time, Siena was saddened by news of the death of Trustee George Lahodny on Aug. 28. He was 65. A retired executive vice-president of Detroit Edison, Mr. Lahodny of Marine City joined Siena's Board in fall 1981.

Trustee Profile: Richard Ransom

'Young People are Our Future'

As chairman of Siena's Board of Trustees, founder of a multi-million dollar company, president of his own consulting firm, and a big game hunter, Richard Ransom gives it his all.

Ransom of Toledo founded Hickory Farms of Ohio, a cheese and sausage retailer, in the late 1950s. "My grandfather sold produce in Toledo and it was a natural transition for the family business to include cheese and sausage, too," he said.

Ransom has served on Siena's board for eight years, the last three as chairman. He's dedicated to the college, and has made planning for Siena's future his personal commitment.

"The Adrian Dominicans have done an excellent job in establishing Siena as a strong, independent, yet moderately priced liberal arts college," states Ransom, who was born in 1919, the same year Siena was founded. "The sisters deserve some help to keep the college going in the future."

Although Siena is stable at a time when several small colleges nationwide are facing tough times, Ransom is concerned about what lies ahead 10 to 20 years down the road.

"I'm not too concerned about Siena's immediate future," he says. "The financial crisis caused by the decreasing number of traditional aged college students, increasing costs, and poor financial planning will hit other colleges before Siena is seriously affected."

"But I'm looking ahead a decade or two and wonder if Siena will survive. The college may be in jeopardy if we don't do some sound financial planning now."

Looking Ahead

Ransom is looking toward Siena's present students and recent graduates to preserve the college's strong traditions.

"The average age of Siena's board members and other strong supporters is probably 55 to 60," he notes. "Within 20 years, about 90 percent of these supporters will have passed on and their contributions must be replaced."

"I'm not sure that students at Siena today realize they hold the college's future in their hands."

Ransom, who never attended college, has contributed substantially to Siena during the past several years, including a three for one challenge grant to the alumni-parent phonathon to encourage new and increased gifts.

He views his contributions and commitment to Siena as an investment for the future of the college, and the future of the country.

"Young people are our future," he strongly believes. "It's up to my generation to leave this world a better place for future generations. From the time of the Founding Fathers, Americans have always tried to leave this world a little better for their children and grandchildren. But during the past 50 years or so, there seems to be a growing pessimism that the world isn't going to get any better. People seem more concerned about 'doing their own thing,' than they are about the future."

Ransom believes the problems of the present should not be passed on to future generations. Young people should be helped today so they can lead productive lives and contribute to society tomorrow.

He has founded two homes for juvenile delinquents in Ohio, sits on the Toledo Juvenile Justice Board, and was appointed by Ohio Gov. James Rhodes to serve on that state's Youth Advisory Board.

Committed to Youth

Ransom is also active with AASK, (Agency for the Adoption of Special Kids) founded by Bob and Dorothy DeBolt, who received honorary degrees from Siena in 1981, and has appeared on the Muscular Dystrophy Telethon with Jerry Lewis.

But his concerns about young people are not limited to those in this country. During the past 25 years, the Ransoms have "adopted" at least 25 foster children from around the world.

"While I was in the army and stationed in Korea, we used to steal food from the mess hall to feed to the Korean kids who lived near the base," he recalls. "I vowed then that I would do something when I returned home to help poor kids."

Ransom and his wife, Betty, joined a foster children program when he returned stateside, and was assigned a little Korean boy.

"This poor little boy lived within a few blocks of the base where I was stationed," he remembers. "We were told the money we donated through the foster children program was used to buy his first pair of shoes. Before, he wrapped his feet in burlap bags tied with rope to walk to school."

25 Foster Children

"In those days we weren't really as comfortable as we are now. We weren't even what you would call middle-class. We probably could have used that $10 a month to buy an extra pair of shoes for our own kids, or a new dress for Betty, but we figured we really couldn't afford not to give to others who had less than us. It helped our kids realize that children without shoes are a reality and everyone isn't as fortunate as they are."

Father of Four

Ransom feels his family's contributions to the poor, at a time when they weren't well off, has helped his four children become responsible, contributing adults.

His oldest daughter Carol, 35, is a mother of two and lives in Perrysburg. Bob, 34, who also has two children, is in real estate and development. He built the offices where Ransom's consulting firm is located. Lynn, 29, owns a Thoroughbred farm in Kentucky and Jan, 23, graduated from Adrian College in May.

"Somehow all our kids turned out well," he beams. "I'm not sure where we went right. I sometimes regret not spending more time with our children when they were growing up. I spent a lot of time away from home when we first founded Hickory Farms, and Betty was home with the kids. She has really been the foundation of our family and deserves the credit for the children."

The demands on his time and energy prompted Ransom to sell Hickory Farms of Ohio to General Host in 1980 for several million dollars. The company he founded had grown from the first store on Reynolds Road in Toledo to more than 570 stores and 110 satellite outlets under Ransom's direction in just 23 years.

"The company became too big and impersonal. All the details of running a company the size of Hickory Farms were more than I wanted," he says.

After selling Hickory Farms, Ransom founded a firm, Ransom Consulting, Inc. to consult franchise owners. His clients include a chain of soup and salad restaurants, a cosmetics company, a tobacco franchise, and a network of health spas.

Ransom Consulting, Inc.

"The consulting company is an opportunity for me to apply the successes of Hickory Farms to other companies and prevent other firms from making some of the same mistakes we made," he says. "It's a chance for a second life for me."

Although Ransom fondly remembers the days when his family could barely make ends meet, he is now thoroughly enjoying the comforts his business success has allowed.

Richard Ransom

He's traveled extensively and has been on several big game safaris in Africa. In his office he proudly displays several trophies, including a gazelle, a water buffalo, elephant tusks, and a cobra.

"The game warden said the elephant was dangerous to the villages so we were given permission to shoot it," he states. "Our cook on one of the safaris found the cobra in his bed."

More recently, Ransom has exchanged his big game rifles for fishing rods and duck rifles. He now stalks ducks on his Canadian marsh rather than big game in Africa.

"Big game hunting is a younger man's sport. You have to be in shape," he smiles. "Now I'm happy to go to my marsh in Canada, fish trout and hunt ducks, or stay at home and enjoy my grandchildren. After all, they are our future."

Herrick Family Receives President's Cabinet Award

The Siena Heights College President's Cabinet Award was presented to the Herrick family of Tecumseh at the fourth annual President's Cabinet Dinner at the Detroit Athletic Club in May.

On behalf of the Herrick family, Catherine (Kitty) Herrick Cobb accepted the award in recognition of her family's "abiding interest in higher education and for demonstrating filial devotion by perpetuating the good works begun by Hazel M. and Ray W. Herrick over a half century ago." Natalia Koselka of Adrian, vice-chairperson of Siena's Board of Trustees, presented the award along with Siena's President Dr. Louis C. Vaccaro.

"Each year the President's Cabinet

Board Approves Budget, Two New Academic Majors

The Siena Heights College Board of Trustees approved the 1982-83 operating budget of $5.36 million at its May meeting. The budget presented to the board in March, includes a $13 per credit hour tuition increase, from $98 per credit hour to $111. Room and board charges were also increased from $950 to $1,000 per semester for a double room. Tuition and fees for a student taking 15 credit hours and living on campus will total $5,300 a year.

"Siena's room, board, and tuition charges are nearly $2,000 below the national average for similar independent colleges," Siena's President Dr. Louis C. Vaccaro told the board. He also noted that more than $2 million in financial aid is available for the 1982-83 academic year through institutional, state, and federal programs.

Board Approves New Majors

The Board approved the expansion of the college's math and computer information academic minors to major programs. Tim Husband, assistant professor of math, noted the significant increase in student demand for advanced math courses during the past five years.

Siena introduced a minor program in computer and information systems in September 1981. During spring semester more than 110 students were enrolled in the introductory computer and the basic computer programming courses.

Following the March meeting the board's committee on trustees, chaired by Richard Keeley, sponsored a workshop orientation session for the board members. The workshop conducted by Dr. Norbert Hruby, president of Aquinas College, emphasized the role and responsibilities of trustee members and also included a review of Siena's history and administrative structure.

Degrees Approved

Also at the May meeting the Board approved the awarding of 363 degrees to the largest graduating class in the college's history. The degrees included 68 associate's, 269 bachelor's, and 26 master's.

In his report to the board Dr. Vaccaro stated that enrollment for fall 1982 looked "promising."

The executive committee, chaired by Willard Reagan, and the finance committee, chaired by Edward Fisher, reported that the college continued to operate with a balanced budget during the 1981-82 fiscal year.

Energy Audit Report

The physical facilities committee, chaired by Gerald Diehl, reported that the campus energy audit recently completed by DiClemente-Siegel Engineers, Inc. recommended energy conservation measures that will result in anticipated savings of $60,000. The committee also reported that $175,000 was allocated for the replacement of 800 sash windows in Archangelus and Ledwidge halls.

Jerome Bohland, chair of the board's investment committee, reported that the rate of return on Siena's endowment exceeded 16 percent. President Vaccaro stated that he is concerned about the size of Siena's endowment fund and encouraged trustees to assist in reaching an endowment of $10 million by 1990.

The fall board of trustees meeting is scheduled for Saturday, October 23.

Dr. Louis C. Vaccaro, president of Siena, and Natalia Koselka, vice-chairperson of Siena's Board of Trustees (center), present the President's Cabinet Award to Catherine (Kitty) Herrick Cobb on behalf of her family in recognition of their "abiding interest in higher education."

Dr. Victor Rosenblum, professor of law and political science at Northwestern University in Illinois, spoke on "Education, Law, and Freedom: Dilemmas of Choice," for the Commencement address.

Siena Honors Achievement, Service

Siena Heights recognized the academic excellence and contributions of 66 students and two faculty members at the college's annual Honors Convocation in April.

Siena's faculty, staff, and students elected Rev. David Van Horn, C.P.P.S., associate professor of art, as the 1982 Outstanding Teacher. In addition to the award, $500 will be contributed to the Teacher of the Year Scholarship in Van Horn's name to be given to an academically outstanding student during 1982-83.

Two 1982 graduates, Carolyn Welniak of Toledo and Bruce Swart of Bath, received Siena's highest student honor, the Outstanding Student Service Award, for their high academic achievement and community involvement.

Carolyn completed a double major in communication arts and management with a 3.9 grade point average on a 4 point scale. She was an officer of the Siena Student Senate, a resident assistant, advertising manager of Spectra, Siena's student newspaper, and a member of the Siena Players.

Carolyn held several internships while at Siena, including positions at WLEN and WABJ radio stations in Adrian, and with P.M. Magazine-Toledo at WTOL-TV. She is presently employed in sales with Procter & Gamble.

Bruce, an accounting major, completed his bachelor's degree with a 3.2 grade point average.

At 6'8", he has played center on the "Saints" basketball team during his four-year college career, the last three seasons as a starter. Bruce averaged 12.2 points per game during the 1981-82 season, and 6.1 rebounds. He was among the top five candidates nationally for the Emil Liston Award, the highest honor of the National Association of Intercollegiate Athletics. Last year, he was named Academic All-American and received the Thomas E. Emmet Outstanding Scholar-Athlete Award.

While at Siena, Bruce held an internship position at Chevrolet Manufacturing in Toledo. He is presently a staff accountant with Arthur Young and Co., a Toledo accounting firm.

Each of Siena's six degree granting divisions selected two students to receive awards. They included: Art Division, Patricia Ceglie of Toledo and Vita Jo Sinacori of Detroit; Communication Arts and Education, Mark DiPietro of Adrian and Carolyn Welniak; Graduate Studies,

William Carl Ladwig of Pittsford and Jean Waters of Coldwater; Humanities, Jo Ann Jones of Adrian and Mary Weeber of Blissfield; Human Services, Glen Butler of Adrian and Mary Elizabeth (Betsy) Gierak of Redford; Management, Carolyn Welniak and Jared Flayer of Flatrock; Natural Science, Kevin Kennedy of Sand Creek and Judith Rink of Adrian.

The Thomas E. Emmet Outstanding Scholar Athlete Award was presented to Ann Brown of Southgate, Robert King of Manchester, and Janice Lucke of Van Wert, Ohio.

Margaret Lawler from Birmingham and Kitty Venus-Madden, associate professor of social work, were presented with the Sigma Kappa Alpha Award for their contributions to the Siena community. Twenty-seven students were inducted into Siena's honor society, Sigma Kappa Alpha.

The Delta Epsilon Sigma chapter of the national honor society, Alpha Beta, inducted 19 members. Six members were invited to join Kappa Gamma Pi, the national Catholic honors society.

Nineteen students were selected for listing in the 1982 edition of "Who's Who Among American Universities and Colleges."

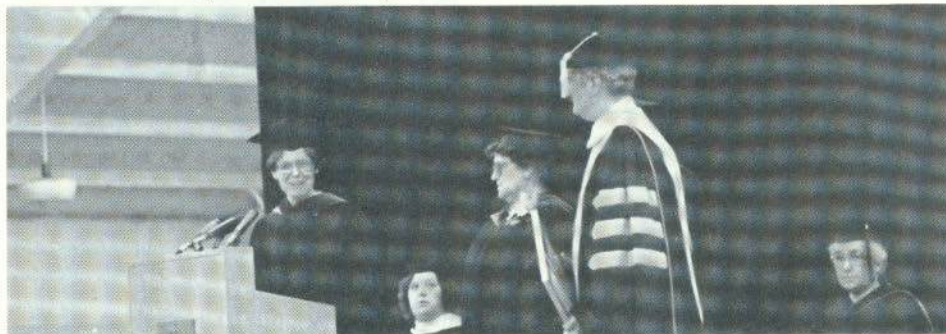

Dr. Miriam Stimson, O.P., director of Graduate Studies, presents the Graduate Studies Divisional Awards to William Carl Ludwig and Jean Beth Waters at the Honors Convocation.

Largest Class in Siena's History

363 Degrees Awarded at Commencement

The largest class in Siena Heights College history received its degrees before an audience of nearly 3,000 during Siena's 61st Commencement on Sunday, May 16. More than 360 degrees were presented, including 68 associate's, 269 bachelor's, and 26 master's degrees.

Sr. Carol Johannes, O.P., (left) prioress of the Adrian Dominican Congregation, and Dr. Louis C. Vaccaro (right) present the St. Catherine of Siena award to Sr. Jeannine Klemm, O.P., professor of art. Sr. Jeannine was honored in recognition of her service and contributions during her 25 years at Siena.

Dr. Louis C. Vaccaro, president of Siena, introduced the Commencement speaker, Dr. Victor G. Rosenblum, professor of law and political science at Northwestern University, who spoke on "Education, Law, and Freedom: Dilemmas of Choice."

James Ebben, dean and provost of Siena, presented the graduates and Dr. Vaccaro, along with Natalia Koselka, vice chairperson of Siena's Board of Trustees and Adrian attorney, presented the diplomas.

Glenn Crane, chairperson of the Teaching Faculty Assembly and associate professor of communication arts, along with Catherine Venus-Madden, vice-chair of the T.F.A. and associate professor of social work, hooded the graduates.

Crane was also mace bearer during the processional and recessional, and welcomed the graduates, their friends and families to the Commencement celebration.

The invocation was offered by Rev. Michael Madden, campus minister, and Sr. Nadine Foley, O.P., a member of the Board of Trustees, gave the benediction.

Siena Presents Honorary Degrees

Honorary degrees were presented to Dr. Victor G. Rosenblum and Dorothy Tombaugh at Siena's 61st Commencement in May. Sr. Jeannine Klemm, O.P., chairman of the Art Division, received the St. Catherine of Siena award.

Dr. Victor G. Rosenblum

Dr. Rosenblum, teacher, scholar, author, consultant, and former college president, is a professor of law and political science at Northwestern University in Illinois. He has taught for nearly 30 years at the University of California, the University of Texas, and the University of Louvain in Belgium, in addition to Northwestern. Dr. Rosenblum was president of Reed College in Oregon from 1968 to 1970.

He is a member of the American Bar Association, the American Political Science Association, the National Institute of Law Enforcement and Criminal Justice, a consultant for the U.S. Civil Service Commission, and a lecturer for the Brookings Institution. He is also vice president of Americans United for Life, the country's only public interest law firm devoted full time to pro-life issues.

Dr. Rosenblum holds a bachelor's degree from Columbia University in New York City and a doctorate from the University of California at Berkeley.

His honorary doctor of letters degree was presented by Adrian attorney and vice chairperson of Siena's Board of Trustees, Natalia Koselka.

Dorothy Elve Tombaugh '65

Siena alumna Dorothy Tombaugh received an honorary doctor of humane letters degree from Sr. Eileen Rice, O.P. '68, chairperson of the Communication Arts and Education Division and associate professor of education.

Following the completion of her master's degree in education from Siena, Mrs. Tombaugh taught biology and chemistry to physically handicapped and blind high school students in Ohio.

With a grant from the National Science Foundation, she toured 85 colleges and universities lecturing and giving workshops on teaching science to the handicapped.

Mrs. Tombaugh has published several articles, including "Teaching Experimental Biology to the Blind" and "Chemistry for the Visually and Orthopedically Handicapped." Her book, "Biology for the Blind," is in its fourth printing.

Mrs. Tombaugh holds a bachelor's in science from Alfred University in New York, certificates in metallurgy and spectroscopy, and a diploma in X-ray and medical technology. Before attending Siena, Mrs. Tombaugh taught chemistry at Adrian High School from 1962 to 1963, and science at elementary schools in Ohio.

Sr. Jeannine Klemm, O.P. '40

In recognition of her dedication and commitment to Siena Heights, spanning a quarter century, Sr. Jeannine Klemm, O.P., professor of art, received the St. Catherine of Siena award.

Sr. Jeannine joined Siena's art faculty in 1957 for a one-year, temporary appointment. But at the end of that year, she decided to remain and celebrated her 25th anniversary at Siena on April 19 this year.

During her tenure, enrollment in Siena's art program has increased from 20 students in 1957 to 200 students today and the college's Art Division has earned a national reputation for excellence. Studio Angelico, the art building, is recognized as one of the best art facilities at a small, liberal arts college in the country. Not only did Sr. Jeannine design and oversee the construction of the building, she also raised contributions to finance it.

Sr. Jeannine has taught sculpture, calligraphy, metal arts, ceramics, art history, and enameling at Siena. She also initiated the bi-annual trip to Florence, Italy, where art students study for a semester.

Practicing what she teaches, Sr. Jeannine is internationally known for her artistic creations. She has designed the interiors of more than 30 chapels and churches, her murals in wood, metal, glass, and mosaic can be seen at several Adrian sites and her calligraphy is known as among the finest in the country.

Sr. Jeannine completed a bachelor's degree at Siena in 1940 and holds two master's degrees from Columbia University in New York City. She also has a doctorate in education from Columbia, and has attended several post-graduate workshops in photography, art history, weaving, calligraphy, stained glass, and design.

The St. Catherine of Siena award was presented to Sr. Jeannine by Sr. Carol Johannes, O.P., prioress of the Adrian Dominican Congregation.

Van Horn has 'Great Integrity' As a Priest, Artist, Teacher

He always knew he would have three identities - priest, teacher, and artist. As a priest he places God above all else. As a teacher he tries to provide the best setting for the nurturing of creative minds. As an artist he believes knowing yourself is a prerequisite of creativity.

Siena Heights College recently recognized his success in each of these roles, when David Van Horn, C.P.P.S. received the college's Outstanding Teacher Award for 1982. In recognition of Siena's commitment to excellence in teaching, this award is presented annually to a faculty member considered to be outstanding by the faculty, staff, and students of Siena.

David Van Horn's flute can often be heard around Studio Angelico.

"David is the epitome of excellence in teaching," states Sr. Eileen Rice, O.P., (Sr. Philip Denise), chairperson of the Communication Arts and Education Division at Siena. "He cares about what he is teaching and about whether his students learn what he teaches. This patience for the teaching/learning process is as important as what he teaches."

Van Horn, an associate professor of art at Siena, comments on the importance of patience in teaching: "You must have both patience and understanding of the creative process. Creativity can not be taught, but the process can be killed if it is not treated properly."

Van Horn's teaching style is valued by both students and faculty at Siena. "He draws answers out of you by making you think," states Michelle Turk of Jackson, a senior majoring in art who has taken numerous courses from him.

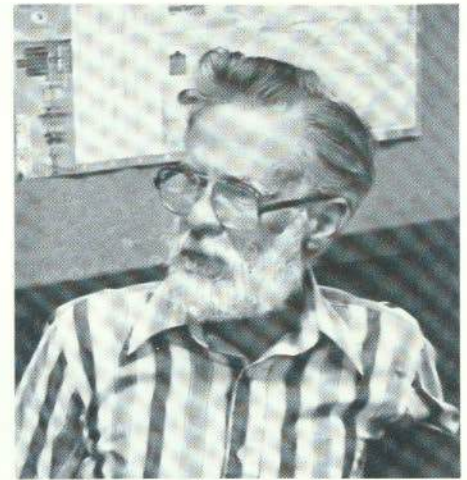

"He conducts his art history classes like an orchestra," suggests Mary Griffin, assistant professor of education and child development. "He makes everything alive and vibrant as he blends art history with the math, music, economics, politics, and human conditions of the historical period he's discussing."

Van Horn explains why he blends all these facets together: "Art is a product of the historical and economic times, not of an ivory tower environment."

If it weren't for the graying of his hair and beard, you would not be able to distinguish Van Horn from his students. His corduroy pants, plaid shirts, wind-swept hair, and the flute under his arm do not reveal he is a priest, either. "The religious order I joined, Society of the Precious Blood, Sanguinist Fathers, has no dress code or vows," he explains. "That was important to me at the time I joined."

But his youthful dress does not make him any less of a priest. Throughout his career as teacher and artist Van Horn has performed many of his former students' weddings, baptized their children, and currently serves as a pastor at Adrian College on weekends.

Although his life is primarily as a teacher and priest, Van Horn is an artist, also. He has a master's degree in fine arts from Chicago Art Institute, and he attended the Art Institute in Faenza, Italy on a Fulbright Scholarship. "There was a brilliant and dedicated art professor in Faenza, whom I consider to be the fourth person of the Trinity," he quips. "He shared his knowledge with me and was an outstanding contributor to my art education."

The sharing of ideas is an important purpose of Van Horn's life. Although he is not a member of the Adrian Dominican Congregation, the Catholic religious order that founded Siena Heights College, he believes in the Dominican motto. "Their motto: 'To study and give others the fruit of their study' is the most brilliantly and succinctly stated of all religious orders," he contends. "I believe in that intellectual ideal."

Van Horn not only lives out that motto by giving Siena students the fruit of his art study, he also teaches Italian to Siena students planning to study abroad. In addition, he studies and lectures on the architecture and art history of Adrian.

"Adrian has more Italianate architecture than any other town in the United States," he states. "The court house and the old library are two examples of the strong Italian influence here. And there is Italianate villa after villa throughout the town."

The Outstanding Teacher Award recently presented to Van Horn is one of several awards he has received for his excellence in teaching at Siena. In 1972 he received a national award as an outstanding educator, and in 1975 he received Siena's Most Effective Teacher Award.

"David is a man of great integrity. He is deeply committed to his priesthood, as well as the mission of Siena Heights College," states Jeannine Klemm, O.P. professor of art and chairperson of the Art Division. "His compassion for students is governed by justice and mercy. David is a cherished friend to all of us. He is golden."

Little Gallery Hosts B.F.A. Exhibits

In partial fulfillment of requirements for their bachelor of fine arts degrees seven Siena Heights art majors displayed their works in one-person gallery shows during Spring Semester.

"The art students' gallery exhibitions are personal statements demonstrating their artistic techniques and skills acquired during four years of intensive study," noted Sr. Jeannine Klemm, O.P., professor of art and chairperson of the Art Division. "The gallery shows are a crowning joy of satisfaction and accomplishments when the exhibits are shared by the faculty, families, and friends of the artists."

Mark Kroupa of Traverse City showed his ceramics, sculpture, drawings, and photographs in the Little Gallery of Studio Angelico during February. "I'm not a prophet," Mark said of his works. "I have no message to give the world. My art merely reflects my work around me and dimensions of myself ranging from sensuous to the humorous."

Photographs, drawings, and watercolors were exhibited by John Currans of Hillsdale, New Jersey, in March. "The purpose of my art is for pure aesthetics," he explained. "I'm not trying to represent anything. I create for the sake of color and design only."

"My art is my reaction to how I was treated as a girl, and how I'm treated now as a woman," explained Barbara Chavez of Toledo, Ohio, who displayed her watercolors and charcoal drawings in late March. "My art is more than color and design. It is a personal statement. It reveals an understanding of me as an artist and as a woman, and how I feel as a person."

Ricardo Egleton of Philadelphia displayed photographs and paintings in his April Little Gallery show. "The majority of my work is self-portraits in the abstract sense," Ricardo explained. "My art shows that I'm still trying to figure myself out. My works are emotional reactions to my daily existence."

Theresa Jay of Detroit exhibited her ceramics, prints, and paintings in her Little Gallery show titled, "Kaput? Kapow?...Kapoo!" during late April. "The show's title is an explanation of my life," she stated. "'Kaput?' describes the desolation and destruction which began my life. 'Kapow?' represents great moments of my life. But neither of those tells a life story properly. 'Kapoo!' explains life as a compromise or a combination of both the destruction and greatness."

The same week in April, Michele Farrell of Scranton, Iowa, displayed her ceramics and watercolor sculptures in her gallery show, "Heterodoxy," at The Art Gallery in Manchester, about 17 miles north of Adrian. "'Heterodoxy,' my show's title, means 'different from an acknowledged standard,'" explained Michele. "I am different. For example, I don't understand why your mittens have to match when unmatched mittens will keep your hands just as warm. I see beauty in many things other people see as ugly."

Metalworks, two-dimensional cloth and paper designs, and enamel plates were displayed by Louise Kissner of Defiance, Ohio, in her Little Gallery show in May. "Each piece in my show emphasized elegance and smoothness," Louise said. "I go for the best on every piece I do. My work reveals that I'm a thinker."

In addition to the bachelor of fine arts one-person gallery shows, two students, Lynne Kramer of Cleveland and Bridget Claser of Bryan, Ohio, showed their photographs, drawings, and watercolors in a combined gallery show, "Separate Opinions," in partial fulfillment of their bachelor's degree in art.

While visiting campus, Dr. Ahmad Sakr (left) donated several books he has written to the college's library. Accepting the books are Dr. Louis C. Vaccaro, president of Siena (right) and Jim Ebben, dean and provost. The book titles include "The Glorious Koran," "The Muslim Guide to Food Ingredients," and "Orations on the Pulpit."

Christians, Muslims Find Similarities Between Religions

"There are numerous similarities between Christianity and Islam," stated Dr. Ahmad Sakr, a scholar of Islam, who spoke on similarities between the two religions at Siena in April. "Christians and Muslims should share in a dialogue and become familiar with each other's beliefs." There are 25 Muslim students enrolled at Siena.

Originally from Lebanon, Dr. Sakr, founder and president of the Moslem Student Association in the United States and Canada, is vice president of the American Islamic College of Chicago and professor of food science at the University of Illinois. He holds a doctorate from U. of I. in food service and nutrition and has written several books on food technology, nutrition, and Islam, including "Islamic Orations," "Nutrition in Islam," and "A Muslim Guide to Food Ingredients."

"Both Muslims and Christians believe in the same God," Dr. Sakr told the audience of nearly 200, including many Muslim students attending colleges and universities in Michigan, Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois. "The Muslim's name for God is 'Allah,' but He is the same God the Christians worship."

Christianity and Islam are both based on morality as interpreted in their holy books, he stated. "The Bible is the authority of the Christian religions and the Koran is the authority of Islam. The Koran offers analogies that Muslims apply to modern life. Islam is a religion of reason with the Koran as the guide, just like the Bible is the guide for Christians," he added.

"Islam is an Arabic word meaning 'peace-loving co-existence, and obedience to God,'" he explained. "Christians also share that love for Almighty God and peace. If Christians and Muslims share a dialogue and cast away their misunderstandings of the other's beliefs, we would co-exist peacefully as people of Allah."

Campus Briefs

Siena Hosts Open House

Deciding to go to college, and then choosing which college to attend are difficult decisions. The Siena admissions office sponsored an open house in April to acquaint prospective students with the college's faculty, staff, and academic programs. The open house included workshops on "Deciding on a College" and "Adult Learner Opportunities at Siena."

Philosophy of Sport

Dr. George Sheehan, nationally-known physician and author of several books, including "Dr. Sheehan on Running" spoke at an all-day conference on "The Philosophy of Sport," held in March. "Aggression in Sports," "Competition on and off the Court," and "Play as Recreation" were topics of workshops held during the conference.

Musicians Attend Conference

Members of Siena's Jazz Ensemble, along with director Michael Lorenz, assistant professor of music, attended the 1982 National Association of Jazz Educators Convention held in Chicago in January.

Benefit Concert

Charlie King, a political folk musician and songwriter, performed at Siena in April. Proceeds from his concert were contributed to the Michigan Nuclear Freeze Initiative Petition Drive.

Siena Signs Agreement

Siena recently signed an agreement with Lake Michigan College to offer a degree completion program on its campus in Benton Harbor.

The faculty of both colleges will jointly teach courses required for bachelor's degrees in business administration, applied science, allied health, trade and industrial areas, and general studies.

Norman Bukwaz, dean of admissions and external programs at Siena, predicts about 40 students will enroll in the program in September. This program is similar to the External Degree Program Siena offers in Southfield.

POPS Tours Schools

The Siena POPS Ensemble '82 toured 21 high schools in Michigan and Ohio during its annual seven-day spring tour. The tour was launched with the "On Tour" concert performed on campus under the direction of Susan Matych-Hager.

Children's Troupe on TV

The Siena Touring Children's Troupe performed "You're Famous and You're What...?" on "Three Cheers for Life," a children's show on WTOL, Channel-11, Toledo. Under the direction of Julianne Dolan Miller, "You're Famous and You're What...?" depicts the lives of 14 celebrities in music, medicine, science, sports, and entertainment who overcame their handicaps.

Music, Theatre Scholarships

Siena's music and theatre departments hosted a Performing Arts Day for high school seniors and college transfers interested in performing arts. Music and theatre scholarships were awarded to several high school students for their academic ability, interest, skills, motivation, and talent.

Aquinas Forums

Issues concerning society, philosophy, ethics, and religion are addressed at the Aquinas Forum lectures held at Siena. Sponsored by the college's chapter of Phi Sigma Tau, the national philosophy honorary society, two Aquinas Forums were held during Spring Semester.

"Christ's Teachings in our Violent World," were discussed by Rev. George Zabelka in January. A Catholic priest, Rev. Zabelka was the chaplain for soldiers assigned to drop the atomic bombs on Nagasaki and Hiroshima during World War II.

Sr. Carol Coston, O.P., an Adrian Dominican, discussed "Politics and Lifestyle" at a February Aquinas Forum. Sr. Carol is founder and executive director of NETWORK, a Catholic social justice lobby in Washington, D.C.

High School Art

Siena's Art Division sponsored a High School Art Show in the Little Gallery of Studio Angelico in March. More than 50 high school seniors from Michigan, Ohio, and Indiana submitted works to the juried show. Scholarship awards were presented to four high school artists selected by Siena's art faculty members.

English Department Lectures

Siena's English department hosted three lectures during Spring Semester. Dr. Janet Kauffman, a creative writing teacher at Jackson Community College, and specialist in the poetry of Theodore Roethke, offered "A Night of Poetry" in February.

"The Immediacy of Shakespeare," was discussed by Dr. Michael Manheim, chairman of the English department at the University of Toledo. Dr. Manheim has written several articles on Shakespearean drama, including, "The Weak King Dilemma in Shakespearean History Plays."

Carolyn Balducci, a widely published author of children's stories, and a poet, playwright, and critic, discussed, "Fact and Imagination: Where Does Fiction Begin?" at an English department lecture in April. Ms. Balducci teaches creative writing at the Residential College, University of Michigan.

Siena hosted the second annual Jazz Festival in March, featuring clinics by professional musicians and a performance by Phil Wilson, one of the world's leading jazz trombonists. Pictured are: Mike Lorenz, assistant professor of music and director of Siena's Jazz Program, on synthesizer; Bill Edwards, adjunct faculty in music, on drums; Phil Wilson on trombone; and Mike Grace of Toledo on bass.

ESL Ceremony

The English as a Second Language Institute at Siena held its certification ceremony in May for 30 students who have successfully completed coursework in English.

The program is designed to prepare international students with varying degrees of English proficiency for study at American colleges and universities. Of the 30 students who completed the program, 22 are enrolled to continue their education at Siena in September.

The students represented 18 countries, primarily from Latin America, the mid-East, and the Orient. Two students are Vietnam refugees living with families in Adrian.

"The Guess Who"

"The Guess Who," an internationally famous rock group, performed new releases, along with some golden-oldies in a concert sponsored by Siena and Adrian College. "American Woman," "These Eyes," "No Time Left For You," and "Glamour Boy" are a few tunes made famous by the Canadian group during the 1960s and '70s.

Studebaker Mime Company

The Boston-based Studebaker Mime Company performed a series of vignettes filled with striking graphic images and animated characters at Siena in March. The four-member company also held workshops on mime techniques while on campus.

Brownbag Luncheons

"Democracy in America," "Status of Women Around the World," and "Great Ideas of the 21st Century" were a few of the topics discussed by Siena faculty, staff, and students at the Brownbag Luncheons winter semester.

The luncheons are sponsored by the college's Teaching Seminar, a faculty group which encourages study of the teaching process.

"Our focus of these presentations is to tap the natural interests of students, faculty, and staff and allow them an opportunity to share their professional and personal concerns," states Sr. Eileen Rice, O.P., assistant professor of education and chairperson of the Communication Arts and Education division, who coordinates the informal Brownbag Luncheons.

Alumni and other friends of Siena who are interested in speaking during a Brownbag Luncheon are encouraged to contact Sr. Eileen. The luncheons are open to the public.

Mark DiPietro, a senior theatre major, performs one of the several memorable songs in the Siena Players production of "Rodgers and Hart: A Musical Celebration," in February.

Siena, Weber Center Offer Adult Courses

Siena Heights College and the Weber Center are cooperating to offer several adult, non-credit, continuing education courses during Fall semester.

Some of the courses offered include: "The Gospel of Mark," "Issues in Marital Relationships," "Chatechist Formation," and "Nuclear War: The Options Facing Us."

The classes are taught by Siena and Weber Center faculty members. For further information contact Rev. Paul Collins, assistant director of the Weber Center, at (517) 263-7088, ext. 403, or Mary Ann Hogue, Siena's Continuing Education Secretary, (517) 263-0731, ext. 287.

Siena Players Present Three Spring Productions

The Siena Heights Players presented two plays during Spring Semester. "Rodgers & Hart: A Musical Celebration" was presented in February as a wine and cheese production. This cabaret revue from the sparkling pens of Richard Rodgers and Lorenz Hart was directed by Glenn Crane, associate professor of communication arts.

"Whose Life is it Anyway," was performed on the Francoeur Theatre stage in April and May. In this compelling drama, a young sculptor paralyzed from the neck down in a car accident engaged in a battle of wits with his doctors in a shattering controversy between medicine and his right to die. This Siena Player's production was directed by Stephen Kiersey, adjunct faculty of communication arts.

"Dr. Dolittle" was the Children's Theatre production during Spring Semester. Directed by Trudy McSorley, associate professor of communication arts and co-director of Siena's Drama in Education program, this production featured a cast of more than 70 youths from Lenawee County.

Students Attend Model UN Assembly

Should the world's nations agree to ban the production of chemical and biological weapons? Should foreign troops be expelled from Cyprus? Is terrorism an international issue? Should the industrial nations be responsible for the well-being of the Third World?

These and other questions concerning world affairs were addressed by seven Siena Heights students who attended the 28th Annual Harvard Model United Nations Conference in Boston held in February.

Attending the four-day conference were more than 1,000 students from colleges and universities across the country, including Yale University, West Point Academy, Stanford University, and Siena Heights.

The Siena students who participated in the conference were: Dean diCiaccia of Niles, Elizabeth Robinson of Redford, Dorothy O'Shea of Toledo, Cynthia Powell of Adrian, Suzette Rygiel of Westland, and Boyd Dunbar of Delta, Ohio.

Simulating the roles of diplomats from Denmark, the Siena students engaged in formal debate on the floor of the General Assembly and in behind the scenes negotiations. For three weeks before their departure they studied the domestic and international affairs of Denmark and the history and structure of the United Nations with Siena's Harvard Model U.N. coordinator, Dr. Thomas Radecki, assistant professor of political science.

Leading Stratford Actor Performed at Siena

Siena

Nicholas Pennell, one of the leading actors at Canada's Stratford Festival in Ontario, was on campus for a week-long residency in February. The week culminated with the actor's performance in a one-man show, "Chosen Words" in Francoeur Theatre.

"Chosen Words" examined relationships between men and women as depicted in the literature of Shakespeare, John Keats, Mark Twain, and several other revered writers. Contemporary views of more recent authors like Woody Allen and Mickey Spillane were also included as Pennell looked at love in all its varieties.

In addition to his performance, Pennell spoke on "Passion and the Performing Arts" at the college's Performing Arts Day.

The actor conducted three two-hour workshops in voice and movement, theatre games, and text reading while on campus. He was a guest speaker in several of Siena's classes, including "Great Dramas" and "Philosophy of Art and Beauty," and lead a text analysis of "Love's Labour's Lost." Pennell also participated in the reading of a new play in progress, "The Sign of a Free Man" written by Simone Juda Press of Ann Arbor, associate professor of English at Siena.

Pennell's Shakespearean credits on the Stratford Festival stage include leading roles in "Hamlet," "King Lear," "Richard

Nicholas Pennell

I," and "Macbeth." He has also appeared in "All's Well That Ends Well," "Virginia," and "The Importance of Being Earnest."

In addition to his stage roles, he has acted in more than 200 television productions, including "The Forsythe Saga," "The Brothers Karamazov," "Tale of Two Cities," and "The Doctors."

Pennell's week-long residency at Siena was funded through a federal grant and coordinated by Simone Press and Glenn Crane, associate professor of communication arts.

Thomas Venner, assistant professor of art, was elected president of the Michigan Potters' Association. The Association has been organizing a dinnerware competition. The winner will be commissioned to make dinnerware for Gov. and Mrs. William Milliken.

Venner has also had his ceramic sculpture displayed at the Robert Kidd gallery in Birmingham, and he taught a ceramic workshop in July.

Joseph Bergman, associate professor of art at Siena, displayed a mixed media collage drawing at the Birmingham-Bloomfield Art Association this summer and has been doing commercial graphics.

Sr. Jean Agnes Klemm, assistant professor of art, had several photographs displayed at the Lenawee Country Club during August.

Bob Pesek, director of the English as a Second Language Institute at Siena, and Liana Kuckelkorn, international student adviser and assistant to the dean of students, attended a conference of the National Association of Foreign Student Affairs in Seattle, Wash.

Pesek also recently participated in two conferences. At a meeting of the National Association of Foreign Student Affairs in Indiana, Pesek spoke on "Admission, Placement, Advising of Students from Malaysia." He was also a delegate representing the Association of Catholic Colleges and Universities at the National Council of Churches conference.

David James, associate director of admissions and external programs, recently published two poems. "Bloodline" will be in the Wayne Review, and "How to Handle a Wife" will appear in the summer issue of the Red Cedar Review. He also gave a poetry reading at the annual Michigan Poetry Festival held in Detroit.

Louis C. Vaccaro, president of Siena gave the commencement address at the graduation ceremony of Saints Cyril and Methodius Seminary and St. Mary's College in Orchard Lake in May.

Linda Easley, assistant professor of human services, and Kitty Venus-Madden, associate professor of social work, presented a paper, "Building Bridges Between Anthropology and Social Work," at the Central States Anthropological Society meeting in Kentucky during April.

Siena Sponsoring Trip Through Irish Countryside

A weeklong escape to the lush, green countryside of Ireland? What better way to spend the last gloomy days of November? The trip, scheduled for Nov. 20 to 27, is arranged through Siena Heights College. It can be taken purely for enjoyment or for college credit, and is open to anyone in the Adrian community.

The aim of the journey is to acquaint travelers with the landscape, art, literature, history, and philosophy of Ireland. The itinerary begins with a banquet dinner at Bunratty Castle, a 15th century fortress, where the guests will be entertained in medieval pageantry. Other sites will include Clonmacnois monastery.

In Ireland's fair capital city of Dublin, the tourists will be treated to a visit to James Joyce's houses, the James Joyce Tower, the National Museum, Christ Church Cathedral, and Abbey Theatre in the evening. Dublin also houses one of Europe's largest breweries which produces Eire's famous beer, Guinness Stout.

Constantly on view throughout the trip as a perfect backdrop to these many historical monuments, is the mountainous, tree-covered land itself. It abounds with lakes, valleys, and mists which inspire the traveler to drift away from the present and slip easily back to the past. For anyone who has Gaelic roots or who ever wished he were Irish, this trip is a must.

Further information on cost and deadlines for the Ireland trip may be obtained by contacting Sr. Barbara Wall, O.P., at 263-0731, ext. 320. The number of openings available on the trip is limited to 40 and although November seems far away, the time for preparation is now.

She chaired the education section of the 84th annual meeting of the Michigan Academy of Science, Arts, and Letters meeting in March, and presided at the second annual session of the Vocational-Technical Educators Conference in May.

In addition, Sr. Eileen spoke at the American Association of Higher Education meeting held in Washington, D.C. She also gave the commencement address at Clinton High School.

Despite Michigan's High Unemployment

Siena's Graduates Find Jobs

Despite high unemployment in Michigan, 89 percent of the 1981 Siena Heights graduates found full-time employment or were attending graduate school within six months of graduation, according to the college's 1981 Placement Record.

Gail Clark Carr '76, director of career planning, co-op education, and placement, explains it is too early to compile placement statistics for 1982 graduates, but she expects these placement statistics will be as positive as those from the previous year.

"We usually wait about six months after graduation, when most of our questionnaires are returned, before we compile our report," she explains. "We encourage the 1982 graduates to return their placement questionnaire as soon as possible, so we can complete the 1982 report by January."

The placement office provides several services to help both students and alumni land jobs. Interviews with prospective employers are held on campus, arrangements are made for off-campus interviews, and the placement office maintains credential files for students and alumni.

"Before you begin a job search, know yourself," Gail strongly recommends,

"Make an honest assessment of your skills, abilities, and your interests. Identify your uniqueness and what makes you marketable."

A workshop on "Developing Successful Resumes" shows students how to convey their uniqueness and marketable skills to prospective employers. "The main objective of a resume is to make the employer interested enough to want to learn more about you," Gail explains.

"Job Search Techniques," the second workshop in the series, stresses targeting and researching the job market, methods for identifying the right job, and fallacies about traditional job hunting strategies.

"In this workshop we stress that 80 percent of all employment vacancies are never advertised in any of the avenues job seekers usually turn to," Gail adds.

The placement office maintains listings of local and national job openings and company information to help students and alumni with their job search.

"Job seekers must take charge of their own job search and not wait for a prospective employer to come to them," she states. "The career planning and placement staff is here to help students and alumni accept that responsibility."

The final workshop, "Effective Interviewing Strategies," focuses on arranging and preparing for the interview, emphasizing the questions most often asked by prospective employers.

"If you have not thought about your answer to a question such as 'Tell me about yourself,' you may not be able to organize and express your thoughts well," she explains. The placement office encourages job seekers to have mock interviews, which can be videotaped and critiqued.

Gail feels supporting students and alumni in their job search, and not allowing them to get discouraged, is another important function of Siena's placement office.

"Job hunting is a rejection process, with acceptance hoped at the end," she explains. "We are there between the 'nos' to encourage the job seekers until they hear a 'yes.'"

Highlights of the 1981 Placement Report

- 89% of the 1981 graduates were employed full time or attending graduate school six months after graduation.
- 85% of the 1981 bachelor's degree graduates are employed in fields directly related to their academic majors.
- 62% are employed in industry and business; 14% are in education; 11% are employed by the government; and 13% are in other fields.
- 15% of the 1981 graduates received teaching certificates. Of these, 47% are teaching full time; 23% are substitute teaching; and 12% have chosen not to enter the job market.
- The average starting salary for 1981 graduates was $16,003. The average salary for women graduates was $15,100, and $16,833 for men graduates.
- 43% of the bachelor's degree graduates are working in Lenawee County; 22% are working in Michigan but outside of the county; 28% are working in other states or countries, such as Arizona, Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, and Nepal.
- Nearly 80% of the graduates seeking employment used the placement office credential files, job listings, and resume service.
- Job listings in the placement office exceeded 3,182 for 1981.

Lenawee County teenagers participating in the Youth Theatre program at Siena during the summer presented "Mime in the Park," in Adrian's Island Park during an August lunch-hour. The mime troupe was directed by Trudy McSorley and Julianne Miller, co-directors of Siena's Youth Theatre/Child Drama Program.

The Instrumental Chamber Ensemble at Siena has demonstrated that music is an international language. Members of the Ensemble are Jacob Chi (left) and Ping Dong (right) from the People's Republic of China, Vicki Massie (center) and Lisa Tinkham (not pictured) from Ohio. The Ensemble is directed by Sr. Magdalena Ezoe, O.P., associate professor of music, who is from Japan.

Music International Language For Siena Chamber Ensemble

"Music is the universal language of mankind," wrote Henry Wadsworth Longfellow. The Siena Heights Instrumental Chamber Ensemble has proven this true.

Two of the four-member ensemble are from the People's Republic of China and their instructor, Sr. Magdalena Ezoe, O.P., is from Japan.

"Music has its own symbols and meanings," explains Sr. Magdalena, associate professor of music at Siena. "People from around the world who appreciate music understand those meanings without the help of verbal explanations and analysis."

Ping Dong, who left his family in China in 1981 to study at Siena Heights College, plays viola in the Chamber Ensemble. "Music is richer and deeper than any language," he expresses, "because it is a means of communication for everyone, regardless of what country he's from or in."

Jacob Chi, who plays violin in the Siena Ensemble and the Adrian Symphony, also left his family in China and his position as a first-chair violinist with Tsingdao Peking Opera Symphony Orchestra, which he held for 11 years, to study music at Siena Heights. "The world's best violinists Jascha Heifetz, Yehudi Menuhin, and Itzhar Perlman are among many who are living in the United States," he claims. "I like classical and jazz music, but in China you are restricted to play only Chinese music."

The two American members celloist Vicki Massie, of Swanton, Ohio, and pianist Lisa Tinkham, of Antwerp, Ohio, believe music narrows the communication gap between countries. "The foreign and American students have no problem performing together because music is a system, like the metric system," explains Vickie, who also plays with the Adrian Symphony. "It is accepted all over the world."

Lisa adds: "The notes and interpretation of the music don't change from country to country. People of differing nationalities can play together as long as they can read music."

The Siena Heights Instrumental Chamber Ensemble has performed at many campus and community events, including church services, "Arts Week" reception at the Lenawee County Historical Museum, and a Kiwanis Club travelogue in Tecumseh.

150 Colleges in 24 Countries

Siena Joins Exchange Program

Siena Heights College was recently elected to an elite program of international study, ISEP (International Student Exchange Program). Siena students now have the opportunity to experience world travel, continue studying, and improve foreign language proficiency.

The program, based in Washington, D.C., at Georgetown University, was founded only three years ago as a federally funded pilot project organized under the Fulbright-Hays Act. The program has since expanded to a network of more than 150 institutions in 24 countries worldwide. Membership in the United States includes about 100 colleges and universities, and Siena is one of two colleges representing Michigan.

Jim Ebben, dean and provost of Siena, is the college's ISEP coordinator. "We are happy that Siena has been accepted to participate as a member of ISEP," he noted. "It provides our students with an opportunity to improve their language abilities while gaining a better understanding of various cultures."

Musicians Need New, Used Instruments

Is there a musical instrument at your home that is not being played? Want to give it a good home? The Siena Heights music department needs new or used musical instruments for its expanding program.

In addition to the traditional band and orchestra instruments, the music department can also use electronic equipment for the college's Jazz Ensemble.

Musical instruments and other gifts-in-kind donated to Siena are tax deductible. For more information on donating musical instruments to Siena's music department contact Susan Matych-Hager, associate professor of music, at (517) 263-0731, ext. 224.

Spring Sports Review

The men's track team placed second in the Tri-State conference and finished fourth in the District, the highest place Siena ever obtained in district competition. Five individual runners qualified for national competition.

Although the women's track team did not compete in final district or conference meets, the team established several stadium records at the NAIA National meet in West Virginia.

The men's baseball team qualified for the NAIA District 23 playoffs.

The women's tennis team finished 2 wins to 6 losses, closing a frustrating season. Coach Kathi Lynch notes, "We had a young, inexperienced team and faced some tough competition, but we are looking forward to the 1983 season."

Siena Athletes Named Academic All-American

Two Siena athletes were named NAIA Academic All-Americans following Spring season.

Senior Janice Lucke of Van Wert, Ohio was named Academic All-American in track. Also a member of Siena's cross-country and women's basketball teams, she was co-recipient of the Thomas E. Emmet Scholar Athlete Award this year and was named Academic All-American by CSIDA (College Sports Information Director of America) following the women's basketball season.

Senior Robert King of Manchester was named Honorable Mention Academic All-American for baseball, the only baseball Academic All-American from a mid-western college. The "Saints" right-fielder also received the Thomas E. Emmet Scholar Athlete award in May.

Richard Holman, a recent master's degree graduate in art, completed this bronze sculpture of a sprinter titled, "The Ideal One," as his final master's project. The statue is on permanent display in the Siena Activities Center.

Fall Coaches Optimistic

• Men's Cross Country

Returning lettermen John Detro, Pat Hickey, Jeff Myers, and All-American Jim Miller, along with several promising talented recruits comprise "one of the finest cross country teams I have been associated with in my nine years of college coaching," notes Fred Smith, cross country coach and Athletic Director.

• Women's Cross Country

Returning letterholders Melinda Trevino, Janice Lucke, Gwen Clor, Kim Swisher, and Gina Diaz will be joined by three new recruits to make the Siena's third women's cross country season the most exciting ever, notes coach Sr. Mary Alice Murnen, O.P.

• Men's Basketball

After losing four starters to graduation, the Saints will feature a young team for the 1982-83 season. Four returning lettermen including captain Lawrence Miller, will be joined by five new recruits. With an average of 21 wins a season during the past four years, the Saints again hope to challenge for the top independent school's spot in Michigan's NAIA playoffs.

• Women's Basketball

The 25-game 1982-83 season will prove to be exciting when the "Lady Saints" meet five new teams, along with their perennial opponents Alma, Shaw, Adrian, Spring Arbor, Aquinas, and De-fiance colleges. Eight returning letterholders and nine new recruits will comprise the team.

• Women's Volleyball

The women's volleyball season promises to be very exciting and competitive, notes coach Kathi Lynch. Six returning varsity players will be joined by three new recruits.

Alumni News

Ann Hughes '82 Named Alumni/Parent Relations Director

Ann Johnston Hughes of Adrian has been named director of alumni and parent relations at Siena Heights College. In her new position she will communicate with the parents of Siena's students, act as a liaison between the college's National Alumni Association and the college, and coordinate several annual alumni activities including the Alumni Weekend and Phonothon. She will also take an active role in Siena's $6.5 million, three-year Commitment to Excellence development campaign.

Ann completed her bachelor's degree in business from Siena in May after attending college part-time for 16 years. She has been employed at Siena for two years as a secretary in the registrar's office and for five years as assistant manager of Siena's campus store.

Ann is a graduate of St. Joseph's Academy and is currently the president of the local St. Joseph's Alumnae Association Chapter. An Adrian native, Ann and her husband, Phil, have two sons.

"I wanted to continue working at Siena because I care about the college," Ann notes. "I feel I have reached a professional goal by attaining the director of alumni and parent relations position."

Carolyn Ortman, the former alumni director, has resumed her teaching career. She will teach third and fourth grades at Sacred Heart School in Hudson.

Small Coleman '76, treasurer, are chairing the Alumni Weekend Planning Committee.

Anniversary classes honored during the annual event are 1927, '32, '37, '42, '47, '52, '57, '62, '67, '72 and '77.

If you are interested in assisting the Alumni Weekend Planning Committee, please contact the Alumni Office at (517) 263-0731, ext. 230.

An Italian dinner prepared and served by Siena President Dr. Louis C. Vaccaro, an Emeriti reception honoring alumni and past faculty members, Las Vegas Night, and a special Liturgical service are only a few of the activities planned for Alumni Weekend, October 29-31.

$31,000 Received

Challenge Sparks Phonothon '82

A Challenge issued by Richard K. Ransom, chairman of Siena's Board of Trustees, proved to be a great incentive in making Phonothon '82, March 8-17, the most successful in Siena's history.

Ransom's Challenge of a match of $3 for every $1 for first time gifts, and $2 for every $1 for increased gifts (to a maximum of $75,000), was aimed at building the number of first time donors and inspiring alumni to raise their level of annual giving.

Alumni, parents, current students, and friends of the college met the Challenge with over 500 new gifts and over 300 increased gifts. To date, almost $31,000 has been received through gifts to the Phonothon, an increase of nearly 27 percent over last year's total.

More than 1,700 pledges were made, for an increase of 25 percent over the number of pledges last year. Currently almost $63,000 of the Challenge has been met.

Florence Pichler '65 of Adrian chaired this year's Phonothon. More than 140 alumni, parents, students, faculty, staff, and friends volunteered to make approximately 5,000 phone calls asking for pledges to the college. Janet Allshouse Curtis '63 of Adrian gained the most pledges of all the callers with 55 pledges in three-and-a-half hours.

"We're delighted with the response to this year's Phonothon," stated Dr. Louis C. Vaccaro, president of Siena Heights College.

"We're especially gratified by the large number of first time donors to the college and the scores of alumni, parents, students, and staff members who volunteered to make this event so successful.

Carolyn Ortman '79, director of alumni-parent relations at Siena coordinated Phonothon '82. Alumni volunteer coordinators were: Cecelia Schwartz '73, Linda Henry '72 and '76, and Mary Small Coleman '76. Siena faculty members also coordinating the Phonothon were Sr. Eileen Rice, O.P., '68, (Sr. Philip Denise) chairperson of the Communication Arts and Education Division, and Whitney Hames, chairperson of the Human Services Division. Student Senate president Maureen Brady enlisted student volunteers.

Pizza and soft drinks for Phonothon callers were donated by Bob Watson of Dominos Pizza, Bill Smith of Pizza Inn, and Dale Cook of Little Caesar's Pizza, all of Adrian.

"We were very pleased with the results of this year's Phonothon," noted Ms. Ortman. "The number of new and increased pledges surpassed our expectations. The callers did an excellent job explaining why a gift to Siena this year is especially important."

Some Phonothon pledges are still outstanding. If you have not paid your pledge, you can still help us reach our goal.

Magdalena Boff '53 (right) and Maria Henzie McNulty '29 were two of the alumni volunteers for Phonothon '82.

National Alumni Association Constitution Revision

After many years of service the Constitution of the National Alumni Association of Siena Heights College needed review and revision.

The proposed revised Constitution was submitted to the Alumni Association membership for a vote as part of the annual Alumni Weekend mailing.

Much thought went into the Constitution revision process. Please give it your careful consideration and return the ballot provided with your vote.

Alumni Directory Nears Completion

All telephone contact has been completed by Harris Publishing Company, publishers of our official alumni directory. The purpose of the telephone contact was to verify the information which the alumni provided on the directory questionnaires and the information currently held on the alumni records.

At the same time, the telephone representatives of the publishing company invited alumni to purchase personal copies of the directory.

The directory is tentatively scheduled for release in December. If you have not received your copy by January 15, or if you are interested in ordering a copy and have not yet heard from the publisher, you may contact them directly at the following address:
